HUDSON FARM

is a private shooting club situated on 3,000 acres of beautifully landscaped farmland and forest in Andover, New Jersey.

For those who have never enjoyed the challenging and exhilarating sport of sporting clays, we have reprinted here a description from Wikipedia:

Sporting clays is a form of clay pigeon shooting. Sometimes described as “golf with a shotgun,” the sport differs from trap and skeet shooting in that:

- It is more difficult than trap or skeet.
- It involves shooting clay targets while positioned at multiple locations (called stations).
- Unlike trap and skeet, which are games of repeatable target presentations, sporting clays targets are thrown in a great variety of trajectories, angles, speeds, elevations and distances.

The original idea behind sporting clays was to create an experience that closely reflected actual hunting conditions. Whereas top-tier trap and skeet professionals may have hit ratings nearing 100%, the best sporting clay shooters hit their targets only about 93% to 95% of the time.

A typical course will consist of 10 to 18 stations [Hudson Farm offers 20 stations], each station having a pair of clay-throwing machines, called traps. Varying numbers of clay pairs are shot at each station, with the total shots for an outing adding up to 50 or 100 (two or four boxes of shells, respectively). Advanced shooters have the clays thrown as simultaneous pairs, while novice or intermediate shooters can opt for the clays to be thrown on report (the second clay launched on the report of the shooter's gun, hence the name report pair). Targets are thrown at different angles and speeds, across the shooter's view (crossers), toward the shooter (in-comers), away from the shooter (out-goers), or straight up in the air. The shots are intended to simulate hunting for quail, pheasant, pigeon, and other game.
